- Three decades ago, with the emergence of Internet and fax machines the world became very small. When computers began to be used, many of them within an office or a library will linked one another. That mean, they could communicated or transfer information from one computer to another. Slowly, these links connected across offices and the internet was born. The internet is the worldwide network of computer links which allows computer users to be connected with computers all over the world. It has the facility of electronic mail or e-mail. We can communicate with anyone who has an e-mail address through internet. The internet also gives us information about almost every field from all parts of the world. It is rightly said that the internet has brought the world at our doorstops. The progress in communication did not stop here. About 20 years ago, something miraculous happened the invention of mobile phone or cellular phone. Cell phone took off slowly ,partly due to their large size and high cost. We can also send and receive a message in real time with the help of a mobile phone. Nowadays, cellular (mobile) phones are very common. They can help us communicate with others anytime and anywhere. We are lucky to live in this century, aren't we?
